

Downed Hawk

wings drooping

he huddles

beside Highway 35

like a defeated

Comanche

warrior

under a reservation

blanket

from April's palette

the morning sky over west Texas is a translucent wash

of cobalt
blue

splotched by a wet brush
fling

of titanium white

that ran just so

into swirls
over the red
hills

along the Palo Duro Canyon

Their Combs Turn Red in the Spring

you see the girls laying out
around the lake

in halter
tops
and bikinis

working on their tans

and the guys
just hangin around lookin

and I think of them stud roosters Mom used to keep

The Spit Bucket

Whenever me
and my sister

went to visit great granddad Bobo

I always had to go to the bathroom

We'd be stuck indoors, because he was sick
had a stoke, Mama said and we would carry all of his meals to him and help feed him

Bobo only had an outhouse but I never wanted to go out there, because

Once I did and it was full of daddy-long-legs tap-dancing on the door slimed slugs
and huge black scorpions

It smelled so awful
It was dark and slippery in there

I was petrified

Bobo would always say,
"Just go over there in my spit bucket, girl!"

So I did

to dust

west Texas farmers live in dread of spring winds whipping

planted fields

stirring grains
of dirt

that beat on each other

until whole sections are blown in black billows

that smother

green

The Old Goodnight Ranch

softly
like an archeologist dusting artifacts I probe this west Texas homestead as I move through the kitchen a mud dobber floats up to the nest

behind the stove pipe

bees pop in through the cistern hole beside the enameled sink mouse droppings litter the kitchen floor a black high button shoe props

the back door open

glancing out, I see the barn broken along the front corner seam boards split apart

like a pair of hands
unclasped

and in the sky
over the windmill
a zig zag of crows

drifts

across the orange

sun

down

Black Birds

the spatter
of black against blue sky
expands
into a wave undulating up
over the windbreak

then as if on command
they pivot
a notch
higher
and flow back over the cedars

with a quick flip they turn and go
south

like a Venetian
blind

flashing
black to nothing to black

The Fort Worth Tornado

chunks of green mirrored
glass

sucked
from the Continental Plaza Building cart-wheeled up Main Street

followed the funnel

east over
the Trinity River

slipped slivers into

Arlington
Grand Prairie
and Dallas

reflecting the wind

Moment In Time

at the Thurber Steak House a ruby-throated hummingbird pauses on the red tulip feeder outside the window

his toothpick beak probes deep for pink sugar
water

that the snaking
tongue laps
up

whirring wings
into an animated iridescence

that arrows
the body
away

killing the rooster

Gramps held the rooster with his left hand
and swung the
ax with his right
the silver edge
sliced clean
and whumped
into the elm stump where it stuck
handle up
the red-combed head lay staring
off of the stump looking sideways across the garden at the bronze body flapping wings
lunatic hopping
gushing blood
and feathers
out among the rows
of green onions

The Spirit

it's there in the earthworm smell
of fresh plowed loam

it's there in the Levi work shirt

it's there in the
worn linoleum and the squeaking Dempster windmill

I see it in those sun weathered wrinkles it's there in every rancher

each time it rains on

fresh sown seed

Texas Wheat Harvest

plump
tan kernels
loll in the June sun waiting
to be picked up
by the churning clippers rolling along through the riptide
spraying straw
in a golden wake

Outhouse Blues

so much of my early life was spent
suspended

above that black and gargoyled
pit

hanging there in the cold ammonia draft remembering the horror stories of a cousin

who disappeared
forever

when he was grabbed from

below

The Car

She's a beauty. A 1931
Ford. Original owner.
Bought her new, when he was twenty-one.
He's eighty years old now. They took his driver's license away. Said he couldn't see good enough to drive.
So he parked his car.
Got her up on blocks in his garage. He goes out there and washes and waxes her every Saturday.

I never saw any car
have such a shine.
It's got a rumble
seat and the factory upholstery. It is all in mint condition.

Shiny black.

She's for sale. That's how I found her. I'm going to buy her.

He lets me sit in her on Sunday afternoons, when she's all cleaned up.

What a car!

fishing for monsters

it was dough balls
and stink bait
mixed days before

then we had to wait for the night of the full
moon

we'd go at dusk
to Lake Whitney

spread out Grandma's old quilt bait the hooks loft them out

set the tensions and wait in the hot July night with the water-cooled breeze chattering the cottonwood leaves we would listen for the whine of a reel or the flop of a giant cat as the cicadas packed seventeen years of buzz into one blitz

and late in the night we would eat white bread sandwiches of cheddar cheese and mustard and I would squint

at the moon-rippled water from my spot between Mom
and Dad

and imagine
my life

Visible Echoes

it rained last night

today the timber is full of frogs

I stop to listen

every tree
each blade of grass
hides

a frog

and back there in the dark green pond

their croaks
ripple

across the water in circled

grooves of sound

Cumulus Clouds

a gallon of rich

country cream

hand-whipped
into stiff peaks

flung from the beater

into dollops
across the blue oilcloth

country cream

I wish I could slip back into that bedroom with the lilac scented breeze fluffing the starched and stretched Irish lace curtains

Big Ben ticking
and the "Girl Watching Robin" print to my grandmother with her white hair and quiet talk who gave me credit for worthy thoughts to the turtle dove coos drifting in from the walnut tree to the embroidered pillow case and the love that swaddled me from the world

when life was full of afternoon naps
under the whir
of Philco fan blades

back to that precious time when the way
was easy

and the mulberries hung ripe ready to fill the evening